Methodist preacher Lewis Bradford went to work at the Ford Rouge plant determined to capture the interest of old Henry Ford himself in his vision of industrial harmony -- but he never returned home.

Was it an accident or was it murder?

In those days, no one dared even ask the question -- at least not in public.

This September, the truth will be dramatically revealed in "Forgotten," an inspiring jazz-opera written by Steve Jones, Bradford's great-nephew. When Jones investigated Bradford's mysterious death, he discovered a life-and-death struggle for dignity you won't want to miss.
